Small Fire.

What might of resulted in a few thousand dollar fire this morning was quickly put out by the prompt work of the fire company.

A fire was discovered in the freight depot, which was discovered by a lady who was at the station waiting for the morning train. N. C. Breen was called and he quickly sounded the fire bell, and within five minutes after the first stroke a stream of water was playing on the building.

Considering the amount of property the railroad company own in town it would be wise to have a certain amount of hose at the depot—it might in the end be the means of saving much property.
