Food Prices Lower Now Than 3 Years Ago--Ladd

Speaking before the. Waterbury Grange on Tuesday night,... Gordon Ladd of Montpelier, OPA executive nont, expressed the opinion that removal of price controls would precipitate a situation comparable to that following World War I, when price levels rose as much as 156%.

Because of OPA and its price policy, food prices at the present time are actually lower than they were three years ago, by a scant margin, he declared.

The men of Waterbury Fire Departmentthoroughly enjoyed a busman's holiday on Sunday when they were hosts to members of various other departments from the surrounding towns.

The Waitsfield Fire Department arrived proudly in a bright and shining new Ford-LaFrance number that is reported to have broken the noses of the ancient jalopies now resting wearily in our fire house. Someone was heard to remark confidentially that that was about all that had not broken already. Demonstrations were held at the park and at the Twin Bridges.

In a contest between the Waterbury and Waitsfield crews, the latter came out the unofficial winner, when they pumped a stream of water about ten feet further at 130 lbs. pressure than Waterbury was able to do pumping at 180 lbs. pressure.

Local people interested in a movement to a proposal to purchase new fire equipment for the Village of Waterbury witnessed the demonstration. The village committee investigating the matter was represented by Chief C. C. Fisher, who was host to the visiting firemen as well.

Following the demonstrations, luncheon was served at the fire house to about 30 members and guests. Besides the Waitsfield contingent the departments from Stowe, Morrisville and Hinesburg were pres-

Show Davison's Work in Filene's Yankee Festival

Vermont craftsman's love for the woods through which he roamed as a small boy, stalking imaginary Indians, is represented in the work of Charles Davison of Water-bury, Vt., included in the Yankee Doodle Festival, an exhibit of native New England handicrafts, which opens in Boston on May 20 under the sponsorship of William Filene's Sons Company.

Davison was educated as an engineer, but he left his job in a Connecticut factory about five years ago to return to his native hills and engage in wood- which had L'a would toront
